

Act Locally, Think Globally: New Perspectives on Creating Cultures of Sexual Respect on Campus

Professor Diane Rosenfeld

Lecturer on Law & Director, Gender Violence Program, Harvard Law School

Date: January 12, 2017 (Thursday)

Time: 5:30pm – 7:30pm

Venue: Large Moot Court, 2/F Cheng Yu Tung Tower, HKU

About the Lecture:

Gender-based violence occurs all over the world in various forms with different prevalence rates. This lecture explores the particular problem of sexual harassment and violence on campus. The commission of campus sexual misconduct has striking similarities in both the Hong Kong and the US, where it has been the focus of extensive public attention over the past few years.

Schools can play a significant role in creating cultures of sexual respect on campus. Student activism, strengthened through social media networks, can bring pressure on schools to improve their prevention and response initiatives. Based upon insights drawn from a decade of teaching and innovative legal policy work with students, schools and the government, Professor Rosenfeld will offer strong recommendations for forging a path forward.
